Wine List

THE OLD AND NEW WORLD WINE

Ancient stone cellars still hold dusty old bottles of wine infused with tradition and mysteriously enticing aromas, but now there appear new flavors made with innovative and youthful expression. France, Italy and Spain, the three largest wine-producing countries in the world, originated and developed the traditional basis for wine-growing and wine making.

Old World styles are usually earthier and drier and depend on structure and other factors to make their wine style. Wine making is more of an art form and the resulting wine traditionally needs time to develop in the bottle and needs to be drunk with food.

New World wines (from the southern hemisphere and North America) such as those from Chile and the U.S. are well known for their exciting "fruit-forward" style (with a prominent fruit flavor and bouquet) and many of the top 100 wines of the world are the new classics from regions such as Marlborough (New Zealand), the Napa Valley (U.S.), Barossa (South Australia) and Stellenbosch (South Africa).

New World wines tend to emphasize fruit. They have challenged the traditional wine making methods employed by the Old World and produce wines which typically have up-front ripe and fruity flavors, and which can be drunk immediately, either on their own or with food. These countries encourage the fruitiness of their wine by picking the grapes at optimum ripeness, keeping the grapes and grape must chilled and by using state of the art technology during fermentation and bottling. Perhaps the single biggest factor in the success of the New World has been improvements in irrigation technology, something that is prohibited in many parts of the old winemaking world. This new use of science and technology horrifies the Old-World winemakers using traditional methods.

White

2017

Chardonnay, Caballero De La Capa, Mendoza, Argentina

350

Ripe tropical fruit aromas with pineapple & peach with notes of vanilla. Rounded with soft & lengthy texture, oaky & buttery on palate with long finish.

2017

Sauvignon Blanc, Bisquertt La Joya Reserva, Colchagua Valley, Chile

350

Bright, clear golden yellow in color, with medium body. The delicate note is reminiscent of white flowers. Its slightly mineral profile adds complexity and its balanced acidity in the mouth.

Rosé

2017

Albet i Noya Classic Rosé, Penedes, Spain

300

Clean, light unpretentious fun and easy drinking rose with red berry fruit intensity, the ultimate summer rosé.

"Drink wine, and you will sleep well. Sleep and you will not sin.

Avoid sin, and you will be saved. Ergo, drink wine and be saved."

FRANCE

France and Wines are two inseparable elements. Though “new world” countries have made huge strides in recent times, when it comes to sheer quality, very few wines can match the consistent quality and complexity of the top French wines.

Each major grape variety is represented with top quality examples from all over the country. From Alsace to Languedoc, each wine region is known for its distinguished wines.

France... the most important wine producer in the world, the country makes a very diverse range of wine: very light rose wine in the south, an area which also produces full bodied reds, predominantly white wine in the Loire and Alsace: and strong classic red wines of Bordeaux, Burgundy, the Rhone and Champagne have exerted influence on every winemaker and producer in the world.

ITALY

Wine has been produced in Italy for over 4000 years. In fact, the ancient Greeks knew it as Oenotria, or land of the vines. In modern times, Italy is the biggest producer of wine in the world, with wine being produced almost all over the country from the Alpine regions such as Trentino and Alto Adige in the far north of the country, to Basilicata, Puglia, and Sicily in the south and as such, the wines of Italy can be massively diverse in style.

SPAIN

Spain is now one of the most important wine regions in the world. One could be forgiven though for thinking that Spanish wine was only about Rioja. In fact, Spain has more land under vine than any other country in the world. A lot of wines made however are sold off, either in bulk to wholesalers, or to the Vinegar trade.

GERMANY

Germany is slowly recovering from a mostly undeserved bad reputation, but now they produce some very unique new style wines, still in small quantities, and have consequently created a cult following for their high quality.

AUSTRIA

Austria, a well-respected wine growing region in Europe is not much known beyond Europe for its wines. Austria whites are dryer. Gruner Veltliner and Riesling are the best-known varietals from Austria.

USA

It was the Spanish who brought wine making to the United States, some 400 years or so ago. While grapes are grown and wines are made in almost all of the country's 50 states, the best quality wines are produced in the 3 states that make up the Pacific coast, namely, Washington, Oregon and California.

ARGENTINA

Argentina is the world's fifth largest wine producer, and for 200 years, the Spanish, the Italians and more recently the French have been making wine there. However, a per capita domestic annual consumption of around 90 liters has long prevented Argentina from looking beyond its borders.

Now, with a rash of new plantings of interesting varieties, such as Malbec, Cabernet and Bonarda, combined with a host of wine making talent from both at home and abroad, Argentinian wines have become some of the most exciting and interesting around.

SOUTH AFRICA

The legendary wine from Constantia became so highly regarded in Europe during the 19th century that it was bought in preference by the exiled Napoleon and Russian tsars, instead of Madeira, Tokaji, or even Sauternes. South Africa's main wine producing areas are still concentrated in the southwest, spreading gradually north and eastward from Cape Town.

CHILE

The image of neatly lined rows of vines grown around a lovely, historic, Spanish style winery with the backdrop of the snow-capped Andes Mountains has got to be one of the most breathtaking snapshots of wine production in the world. Much like the rest of the "New World", Chilean wines remained unknown to most of the world until the last 20, even 15 years. The Chilean wine industry has been phenomenally successful in a short amount of time, thanks to major quality improvements, investment, excellent growing conditions, and an acquired reputation as a source of good-value, consistent wines.

AUSTRALIA

"On the 24th of January two bunches of grapes were cut in the Governor's Garden from cuttings brought three years before from the Cape of Good Hope." The year was 1791, the chronicler, Watkin Tench, and the site of the garden is now occupied by the Inter-Continental Hotel in Sydney's Macquarie Street.

Between 1820 and 1840 commercial viticulture was progressively established in New South Wales, Tasmania, Western Australia, Victoria and finally South Australia. As Australia has no native grape varieties, all vines grown in the country are imported from Europe.

NEW ZEALAND

The vineyards of New Zealand lie in between the 35 and 45 degree latitudes, the European equivalent of between Bordeaux and Southern Spain. Growing vines on the margins can have some spectacular results, notably Rieslings from the Mosel and Chardonnays from Chablis. Nevertheless, it was not until the 1980's that large scale plantings of quality varieties got underway. Muller Thurgau was replaced by Sauvignon Blanc and was planted on the dry gravelly riverbeds of Martinborough and Marlborough. Throughout the 1990's, Pinot Noir vineyards sprouted in all parts of both the North and South islands, from Auckland to Central Otago.
